RECORDED PRISON DEATHS.

Dorance Atwater, Who Has Just Died in San Francisco.

Former State Senator Francis Atwater of Meriden received word from San Francisco Tuesday of the death in that city Monday night of his brother, Dorance Atwater, widely known as the man who made the secret record of the deaths of federal prisoners in the Confederate military prison at Andersonville.

Mr. Atwater was born at Plymouth, this state, in 1845, and at the age of sixteen enlisted for the war with the first squadron, Connecticut cavalry, and was later connected with the Harris light cavalry of New York. He was taken prisoner in February, 1864, and sent to Andersonville prison, where he was detailed as clerk to make a record for the prison of the deaths among the federal prisoners.

Suspecting that the time compiled by him was not being sent to the government, Mr. Atwater made a duplicate of the list and gave it to the authorities, keeping it from their knowledge. His list contained some 13,000 names. When in 1865 he was sent to the parole camp at Annapolis he carried this list with him, and it was the lining of his coat. The question of the ownership of the list caused considerable litigation, but recently recognition was given Mr. Atwater by the government.

He leaves his wife, who before her marriage to him was a great admirer of his, and one of the Society Islands group.

Is a Miser Happy?

One of the most intimate associates of John D. Rockefeller declares that he never has seen the old millionaire spend a penny on himself. He refers to those incidental and personal expenditures that the ordinary man treats as a matter of course. According to his statement, Mr. Rockefeller never bought a cigar, or an ice cream soda, or a ticket to the circus or theater.

No average human being can understand what satisfaction Mr. Rockefeller can get out of money that he never has seen nor handled, but which his habits of economy will not permit him to spend. But Mr. Rockefeller insists that he is quite happy. He assures us that it is a greater pleasure to save than to spend. He advises all young men to develop the saving habit so early and effectively that it will dominate them through life.

Undoubtedly, most of us would be better off financially if
